“When you see that many kids that enthusiastic about taking part in class, you can’t help but be excited.”

Larry Williams, Superintendent, Allen County Schools

Reactions from Kentucky educators

“Would you send a carpenter out without a hammer? This is something that should be a standard tool of the trade, just like a book or a chalkboard. It’s that useful.”

–Dean Smith, Computer System Administrator, Monroe County Schools, Tompkinsville, KY

“I thought I understood what this system does for our students, but then I sat in the back of a classroom after one week of summer school. I saw kids, who were there for remediation, very involved, interacting with the technology, teaching each other, building self esteem, and performing exceptionally well. That’s why I feel so passionately about it.”

–Larry Williams, Superintendent, Allen County Schools, Scottsdale, KY

“Parents of special needs students have contacted me and told me that it’s just been an open window for their child, and they’ve noticed a great difference with the children as a result of utilization of the system.”

–Dale Brown, Superintendent, Warren County Public Schools, Bowling Green, KY

“When we finish this project we’ll have 725 ACTIVboard systems, with 658 installed so far. That’s over 4,000 individual pieces of equipment. And I can tell you, it was one of the easiest implementations I’ve ever worked on. South Western, Dukane and Promethean all stepped up and said, ‘we’ll help you solve any problem.’”

–Pat Stewart, Director of Technology, Warren County Public Schools

“We’re sold enough on these systems that, by Christmas, we intend to have them in every elementary classroom, then move on to middle school and high school.”

–George Wilson, Superintendent, Monroe County Schools
